Spain's humanitarian assistance

How much does Spain spend on total official humanitarian assistance?

Spain spent US$285 million (€227 million) on total official humanitarian assistance in 2006 – its highest contribution over the 12-year period under review.

There has been a clear upward trend in the country's official humanitarian assistance expenditure over the last 12 years, with the steepest growth taking place between 2002 and 2003. By the end of 2006, levels were US$177 million higher than they had been in 1995 (an increase of 186%). Spain was one of only nine DAC countries to have sustained growth in 2006.

In 2006, the total official humanitarian assistance of the DAC donor countries amounted to US$8.5 billion. This is US$806 million (9%) less than in 2005. However, the donor countries are contributing US$3.4 billion (70.2%) more than in 1995. This equates to compound annual growth of 110%.

Spain's total ODA was US$3.8 billion (€3 billion) in 2006 – total official humanitarian assistance accounted for 7% of this amount.

Spain's ODA is 0.3% of its gross national income (GNI). Its total official humanitarian assistance is 0.02% of its GNI.

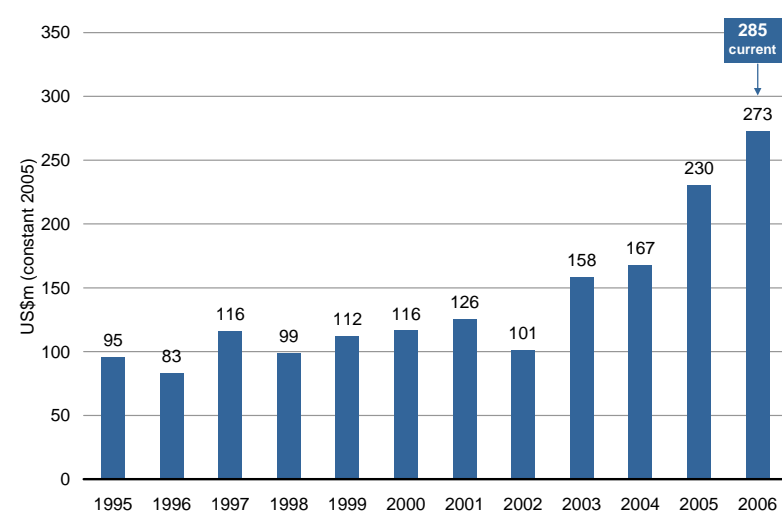

In 2006, the ODA of the 22 DAC donor countries amounted to US$104 billion – or 0.3% of their combined GNI. Donors collectively spent 8% of their total ODA on total official humanitarian assistance that year – or 0.02% of their combined GNI.

How much is given as completely unearmarked funding to multilateral organisations?

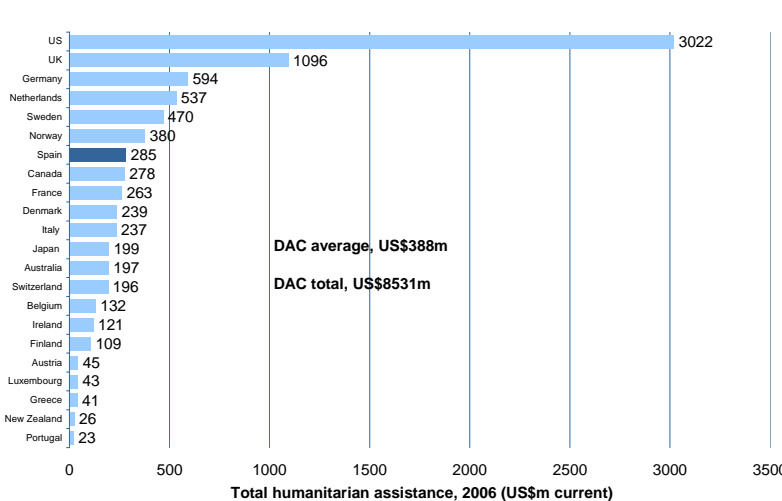

Spain channelled 50% of its official humanitarian assistance multilaterally (as defined by DAC) in 2006 – 37% as unearmarked funds via the EC and 13% in unearmarked funds via the UN agencies.

20% of the DAC donors' joint total official humanitarian assistance was spent via multilateral channels in 2006. 12% of it was unearmarked and channelled via the EC. A further 8% was unearmarked and channelled through the WFP, UNHCR and UNWRA.

Spain allocated 30% of its bilateral humanitarian assistance to three countries in 2006

7% of the country's official humanitarian assistance went to priority projects within the UN CAP

Spain supported 14 of the 22 UN CAP appeals in 2006

Where does Spain spend its bilateral humanitarian assistance?

Spain reported humanitarian assistance to 59 countries in 2006.

Together, the top three recipients – Iran, Lebanon and Afghanistan – received US$32.7 million (30%) of the country's bilateral humanitarian assistance. A further 12 countries received a total of US$54.1 million, accounting for 51% of the total. This means that the remaining US$21.6 million (19%) was shared by 20 countries.

In 2006, the top three recipients of bilateral assistance from DAC countries were Sudan (US$1.1 billion), Pakistan (US$321 million) and DRC (US$299 million). This represented 34% of their joint bilateral assistance.

How much is spent through the UN consolidated appeal process (CAP)?

Spain reported US$68 million through the UN financial tracking system (FTS) in 2006, which represents 24% of its total official humanitarian assistance expenditure that year.

US$21 million was allocated to priority projects within the CAP appeal. This represents a 7% share of Spain's total official humanitarian assistance in 2006.

The 22 DAC donor countries contributed US$5.3 billion to the 22 UN CAP appeals that ran during 2006. This represents 62% of their total official humanitarian assistance for the year. 23% of total official humanitarian assistance was for priority projects within the CAP.

In 2006, the top three consolidated appeals supported by Spain were Palestine/OCT (US$4.3 million), DRC (US$3.7 million) and Sudan (US$3 million).

In 2006, the top three CAP appeal requirements were for Sudan (US$1.6 billion), DRC (US$696 million) and Zimbabwe (US$426 million). These three appeals were underfunded by 34%, 49% and 36% respectively. By way of comparison, the appeals for Lebanon, Kenya and Timor-Leste received 23%, 5% and 3% more funding respectively than had been requested.
